

We are NPR News & the NPR Member Stations

Our Mission

We will create a more informed public, one challenged and invigorated by a deeper understanding and appreciation of events, ideas, and culture within the United States and across the globe. To this end, NPR and NPR stations report, produce, acquire and distribute news, information and other content that meet the highest standards of public service in journalism and cultural expression.

Our Guiding Principles

At our core, we are a news organization. Our news content, whether on the radio, on the web, or in any other form, must attain the highest quality and strengthen our credibility. Our journalism is as accurate, fair and as complete as possible. Our journalists conduct their work with honesty and respect, and they strive to be both independent and impartial in their efforts. Our methods are transparent and we will be accountable for all we do.

We hold those who serve and influence the public to a high standard when we report about their actions. We must ask no less of ourselves. Journalism is a daily process of painting an ever truer picture of the world. Every step of this process – from reporting to editing to presenting information – may either strengthen or erode the public's trust in us. We work hard to be worthy of that trust.

These principles are intended to guide our journalism, both as it is performed and as it is perceived. The principles exist not only to answer questions, but more importantly, to raise them.

Our Promise to the Audience

We will be:

- Accurate. We pursue the truth. Diligent verification is critical. We take great care to ensure that statements of fact in our journalism are both correct and in context. In our reporting, we rigorously challenge both the claims we encounter and the assumptions we bring. We devote our resources and our skills to presenting the fullest version of the truth we can deliver, placing the highest value on information we have gathered and verified ourselves.

- Fair. It is essential that we treat those we interview and report on with scrupulous fairness. We make every effort to gather responses from those who are the subjects of criticism, unfavorable allegations or other negative assertions in our stories. Whenever we quote, edit or otherwise interpret what people tell us, we aim to be faithful to their meaning, so our stories ring true to those we interview. In all our stories, especially matters of controversy, we strive to consider the strongest arguments we can find on all sides, seeking to deliver both nuance and clarity.

- Complete. We do our best to report thoroughly and tell stories comprehensively. We won't always have enough time or space in one story to say everything we would like or quote everyone we would wish to include. But errors of omission and partial truths can greatly damage our credibility, and stories delivered without context are incomplete. Our journalism includes diverse voices that reflect our society and divergent views that contribute to informed debate. When we find that we can't deliver all the answers to important questions, we explain what we don't yet know.

- Honest. In the course of our work, we are genuine and candid. We attribute information we receive from others. We avoid hyperbole and sensational conjecture. Sometimes, we may construct hypotheticals to help explain issues and events. But we are transparent about them and do not otherwise mix fiction with our news reporting. Information is edited and presented without deception, and we identify ourselves as NPR or Member station journalists when we report. Only in the rarest of instances – such as when public safety is at issue, or when lives are at stake – might we disguise our identity or intent. Before we take such a step, we engage in rigorous deliberation and consider all alternatives. Then, we disclose what we did and why.

- Independent. We must make it clear that our primary allegiance is to the public. Any personal or professional interests that conflict with that allegiance, whether in appearance or in reality, risk compromising our credibility. We are vigilant in disclosing to our supervisors and the public any circumstances where our loyalties may be divided – extending to the interests of spouses and other family members. When necessary, we recuse ourselves from related coverage. Under no circumstances do we skew our reports for personal gain, to help the bottom line or to please those who fund us. Decisions about what we cover and how we do our work are made by our journalists, not by those who provide us with financial support.

- Impartial. Our experiences and perspectives are valuable assets to our journalism. We enjoy the right to robust personal lives, yet we accept some unique professional obligations and limitations. We have opinions, like all people. But the public deserves factual reporting and informed analysis without our opinions influencing what they hear or see. That's why we strive to report and produce stories that transcend our biases and treat all views fairly. It's also why we refrain from expressing person opinions on social media. We know that to remain impartial, we often must aggressively challenge our own perspectives.

- Transparent. To inspire confidence in our journalism, it is critical that we give the public the tools to evaluate our work. We reveal as much as we practically can about how we discover and verify the facts we present. We strive to make our decision-making process clear to the public, especially when we find ourselves wrestling with tough choices. We disclose any relationships, whether with partners or funders, that might appear to influence our coverage.

- Accountable. We take full responsibility for our work. We welcome questions or criticisms from our stakeholders and to the best of our ability, we respond. Mistakes are inevitable. When we make them, we correct them forthrightly and publicly, reflect on what happened, and learn from them.

- Respectful. We are civil in our actions and words, avoiding arrogance and hubris. We listen to others. When we ask tough questions, we do so to seek answers — not confrontations. We are sensitive to differences in attitudes and culture. We minimize undue harm and take special care with those who are vulnerable or suffering. And with all subjects of our coverage, we are mindful of their privacy as we fulfill our journalistic obligations.

- Excellent. Our journalism is most valuable when we marry important truths with engaging narrative. We take enormous pride in the craftsmanship of our storytelling and in the quality of the words, sounds and images we use to help illuminate the world. When we edit, it is to add impact and clarity to our journalism — never to slant or distort. We don't allow what is sensational or trending on social media to obscure what is significant. We aspire to tell stories that rise above the maudlin and mundane, avoiding shallow sentimentality. Above all, we do our best to faithfully and powerfully convey the truth.